Pfizer's 2015 patient organisation disclosure report

Executive summary

Pfizer is committed to working transparently with patient organisations. For more information about how and why Pfizer works with patient organisations please visit http://www.pfizer.co.uk/content/working-patients

Patient organisations can take many forms, but largely aim to improve the lives of people with a particular disease or medical condition. As well as supporting their activities, working with patient organisations can help us have a better appreciation of the specific needs of patients and how we can better support these needs.

We provide charitable donations or sponsorships to support patient organisations' independent work to help, or to advocate for, people affected by a particular condition. In addition, where there is a common purpose, we sometimes identify areas on which we are able to collaborate or partner on specific projects.

Transparency is at the heart of our approach when working with patient organisations. Our systems and processes support high standards of compliance and governance, and there are high expectations on our staff to act with integrity.

In providing funding or working with patient organisations, Pfizer's guiding principle is to ensure that the organisation's independence is never compromised. If this is put at risk, then credibility starts to be lost on both sides and this helps no one. We feel passionately that relationships with patient organisations are both valuable and essential, and by operating with a high degree of transparency, we can be confident and proud of the relationships we have developed.

As a member of The Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry (ABPI), we must declare a list of patient organisations to which we provide financial support and/or significant non-financial support, including a description of the nature of the support and its monetary value.
